Cadillac was always aware that their cars were a symbol of America, and that each model was rigorously analyzed by industry critics.

The company had the slogan "Cadillac Standard of the World" and its clients expected everything to work perfectly. The Cadillac Eldorado series built between 1961 and 1964 reached the highest level of quality among convertibles that the brand manufactured. In 1964, Cadillac built the most powerful engine in its history, 429 cu in providing 340 hp and an impressive torque engine.

This model, from 1964, equipped with a 7.0-litre V8 engine with 4-speed automatic Turbo Hydra-Matic gear change, 5,677 metres long and 2,019 metres wide, offers a stunning image. The 1964 Cadillac Eldorado was the only car that had leather upholstery on all the seats and door panels, and was also the only one that was delivered from the factory with whitewall tires as standard equipment. Its modest tails marked the end of the fashion for tail fins, which in 1959 had reached almost hysterical extremes of size and ostentation.

Thermostatically controlled fully automatic heating and air conditioning was installed in this model for the first time in the automotive industry. Its interior is fitted with leather and African Baku wood.

Our version is the most luxurious, called "El Dorado" and also has all the extras of the time, such as cruise control, automatic windows and seat adjustment, central door locking, automatic trunk opening , Twilight Sentinel (automatic lights after dark), cornering light (lights illuminate the sides on turning), Guide-Matic Headlamp Control (switches automatically from full beam to dipped when approaching a vehicle), special sound equipment, adjustable steering wheel and Comfort Control (the first vehicle to be equipped with automatic climate control for heating and air conditioning)
